In July, 2017, Officer Megan Freer responded to a report of a missing 19-year-old male in Langhorne, PA. Suspecting immediately that this was a suspicious disappearance, Officer Freer’s first step was to ping the man’s cell phone. She then retrieved video surveillance from a neighbor, which showed the man leaving his house and getting into a truck. When she ran the license plate of the truck, she determined it was owned by someone who lived in the same rural vicinity where the man’s cell phone was last used. Hundreds of law enforcement officers soon converged on the site. After just 12 hours of investigation, it became clear that this was the final resting place, not just for the man she was searching for, but for FOUR missing men in Bucks and Montgomery County.
