Lt. Boyle responded to a 911 call at the Melrose Park train station, where a woman named Hallie Lindsay suffered a cardiac arrest. (He later learned that she had a temporary heart condition called Takotsubo Cardiomyopathy, which was brought on by stress following the recent death of her mother.)

He never gave up his attempt to revive Halley even though her heart had stopped for 45 minutes.

Lt. Boyle visited Hallie in the hospital when she remarkably recovered after 21 days.

He has remained friends with Hallie and her father, who consider him their “Hero.”
